Project Title: The Worlds of Aya Takano

Overview

A six-page responsive microsite about Japanese painter Aya Takano. The big idea: the website should feel like stepping inside one of her paintings. It should be legible and easy to navigate, but creative and a little unpredictable in how it's organized.

Tone

Delicate, whimsical, elegant, and playful. Light and airy, like her floating figures and dreamy landscapes.

Color

Pastel pinks, greens, and blues on a warm cream base, blended softly like paint.

Blush Pink	Petal	Meadow	Mint Mist	Sky	Cream	Dusk (text)
#F6C9D3	#FBE3E8	#BFDDB4	#E3F0DC	#BCDCF2	#FBF8F2	#5B5568

Typography

- Titles: a frivolous, swirly script like Pinyon Script or Gwendolyn, used large and allowed to overlap images.
- Body: a clean, modern sans-serif like DM Sans at 16 to 18px.

Layout

- Asymmetrical, overlapping layouts instead of rigid grids, with images in soft, organic shapes.
- Small floating details (clouds, petals, animals) that drift or react on hover.
- Consistent navigation and calm backgrounds behind text so everything stays readable.

Deliverables

Desktop and mobile mockups of the Home page and one interior page, plus a simple style guide. I'd love your own ideas for small moments of surprise, as long as content stays easy to read.

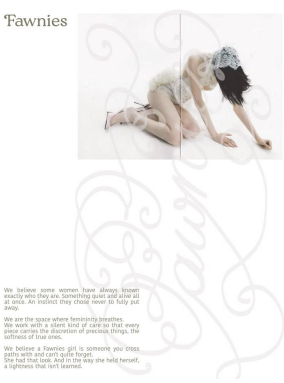

Inspiration

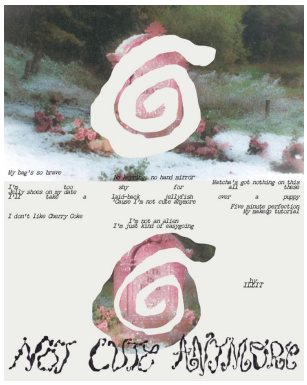

Aya Takano painting – The palette, floating figures, and dreamy mood to build from.

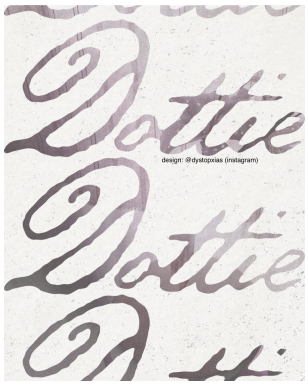

Somnia – Soft watercolor texture and delicate floating type.

Fawnies – Faint script layered behind images; lots of white space.

Not Cute Anymore – Playful, scattered type and shaped image masks.

Dottie – Oversized script used as texture, cropped off the edges.
